

Kerry Shannon resides in Aberdeen, SD, which is only known for being one of the coldest towns in the contiguous forty-eight. She is a high school English teacher. If you ask her students what she enjoys teaching most, they would tell you “all of it!” because of her enthusiastic, compulsive, and completely true use of the phrase, “this is one of my favorite units to teach!”

Kerry also fills the role as Students Services Coordinator at her school; she helps students with all things college and career as well as spring testing and graduation ceremony, which she enjoys immensely. Recently, she has thrown her hat in the ring of administration as Curriculum Assistant. Finally, she serves on the South Dakota English Language Arts Advisory Committee.

And while Kerry is not a published writer (except for this biography post), she is the extremely proud teacher of students who are award winning and published poets.

When given the opportunity, Kerry enjoys traveling the world, serving others, and spending time with the most important people in her life.
