

Stephanie Radle

While in High School, Stephanie split her time between music, karate, and writing. The first of those passions brought her to I.M.C twice while in school and to Concordia College for her freshman year, but the love of literature won out and turned into a career as an English Educator. Stephanie earned her bachelor's degree in English Education at the University of North Dakota and her Master's in Education with an emphasis in English from Minot State University. She continues to further her education in Communications at Valley City State University and has attended the Northern Plains Writing Project three times. She now teaches Junior and Senior English as well as Dual-Credit Speech, coaches debate, and co-advises the school's GSA in West Fargo, North Dakota.

When not working, she spends her time with her husband, sister, and two cats baking or playing video or board games.
