

Alexis (Lexie) Aguilar is a saxophonist currently based in the Twin Cities. In addition to her current studies, pursuing aDMA in saxophone performance at the University of Minnesota, she teaches as an adjunct professor of saxophone at the University of Saint Thomas in Saint Paul, Minnesota as well as privately in the community. Lexie enjoys being an active member of her music communities, and has performed with the Minneapolis Orchestra, the Quad City Symphony Orchestra, at North American Saxophone Alliance Regional Conferences, and at the Iowa Saxophone Unite Conferences. Additionally, she loves working with the University of Minnesota's New Music Ensemble, both as a performer and administrator. Previously, Lexie received a Masters in Music from the New England Conservatory under Ken Radnofsky, as well as a Bachelor of Arts in both French and Saxophone performance at Augustana College, under Dr. Randall Hall.