

Isaac Homuth

Isaac has been a visible member of the music community in the Fargo–Moorhead area since 2015. He broadened his horizons by making connections in the professional music scene and working as a substitute musician in many local groups. Today, he is a first-call sub for the region's most notable commercial groups and big bands and plays in a number of his own groups.

While pursuing a degree in music education at North Dakota State University, Isaac has become an important member in the NDSU Challey School of Music by serving in many leadership roles. Some of these include being a member of the student council, principal trumpet in the Wind Symphony, lead trumpet in the Jazz Ensemble, leader of the Gold Star Brass quintet, and Vice President in the Gold Star Marching Band as well as trumpet section leader. Some other notable achievements at NDSU include being the recipient of the Theodore Presser award and the Orv Eidem Jazz Alive scholarship.

Following college graduation, Isaac was offered a full time position teaching elementary music at Clara Barton–Hawthorne Elementary in Fargo and later accepted a new position serving as band director at Carl Ben Eielson Middle School in the Fargo Public Schools district. Isaac teaches private lessons to a wide variety of student instrumentalists. Some of his other hobbies include enjoying authentic food from many different world cultures, doing activities such as disc golf, skiing, or table tennis, relaxing with friends, watching movies, or traveling.
